Call for Proposals

International Graduate Student Symposium

February 21-22, 2019

York University, Toronto, Canada

The Global Labour Research Centre at York University invites proposals for presentations at its upcoming fourth annual international graduate student symposium, which will take place on February 21-22, 2019. To encourage the formation of the broadest intellectual community, we invite proposals on a wide range of issues and areas of research, including (but not limited to):

- Work, employment, and labour rights
- Migration, citizenship, and work
- Inequality, work, and labour markets
- Gender relations at work and in labour movements
- Revitalization of workers' movements
- Work and popular culture
- Labour, colonialism, and decolonization
- Work, labour movements, and the environment
- Work and health

The symposium is designed to provide an interdisciplinary venue for graduate students and post-doctoral fellows to share their research ideas in a collaborative and supportive environment. Submissions may include dissertation proposals or chapters, major research papers, or course papers. Participants are encouraged to present on works in progress. In addition, symposium participants will be encouraged to submit their papers for consideration for publication in the GLRC's Graduate Symposium Proceedings.

Deadline for Submissions | November 4, 2018

- Title and a 150-word abstract of the proposed poster or panel presentation; and
- A short biography, including list of degrees, current position and research interests

Registration Fee | $30

Please submit your proposal and supporting information using the following link.

Submitters will be notified on the status of their proposal by November 16, 2018. For more information about the symposium go to <http://glrc.appso1.yorku.ca/event/international-graduate-student-symposium-2019/>
